Editorial.

FELLOW STUDENTS:

In submitting to you this volume of the Index, we have to offer a congratulation upon being enabled to look back on a year full of prosperity and satisfaction, and replete with facts which, as bearing on the future of our institution, are significant.

We allude to the growing popularity of our college and the rank it is taking among institutions of learning. From the year of its foundation the college has had to encounter oppositions of every sort and magnitude; and, worse than all others, that know-nothing opposition that opposes simply because it don't know. We are slowly but surely living down all this unfriendliness; and, fellow-student, don't leave all this work of conversion to the man at the wheel. Although the ship is in good hands, yet we, as students, in our peculiar relations with one another and with the public, act an important part in giving character and place to the college.

We suppose it is our province to criticise departments and practices. As for the former, they are all that could be desired; we are instructed by live men whose constant effort it is to give us the latest and best. Especially do we notice the activity and interest that has sprung up in the Military Department, since the advent of the new Professor. Much has been urged against the extended system of military instruction recently started in this country. In this age of rivalry a people, to be great and to maintain its greatness, must be a nation of soldiers.—veterans in all the details of war. To be able to marshal, equip, arm and set in motion an army of drilled men at a moment's notice,—this constitutes the reliable independence of a country. Our military organization has always been a great feature of the college, and it bids fair to become doubly so under the present instructor.

As regards practice, we know of none so demoralizing as to deserve censure. College students are usually denominated wild; perhaps there are some of us who come under the general epithet. But we know that wild generally means wide-awake, and the more of such men we get here, the better.

The athletic games were a success. A comparison of our records, with those of other colleges, will show that we are far from being behind in field sports. The thanks of the college are due the Committee for their judicious selection of prizes and complete arrangements. We hope to see a continued interest in these games, believing that there are real benefits resulting from them.

We have a word to say to the succeeding class: not fail to publish the Index.; there are some in every class who will be indifferent or opposed to the publication. This is the only exponent there is in college to represent the students, which ought to be a sufficient reason for its continuance.

In accordance with the regular course of yearly change, the class of '76 finds itself enrolled at the head of the College lists. One after another of the classes preceding it have completed their four years journey through the different branches of science, and have departed with their sheep-skins to plow their way to fortune or fame, and '76 has been left in the responsible position of Seniors, the leaders and mentors of the College.

In any question of importance or interest, all eyes are directed towards '76 for advice and guidance, and they find us not unprepared. We have only to consider the immeasurable influence that a Senior class may exert upon the College, to remember that our efforts will be seconded by the other classes, no matter in what direction they may be turned; to resolve, that whatever influence we may exert may be for the benefit and improvement of our institution. Already, under our direction and management, many of the old fashioned college customs have vanished; hazing and cane rushing are for us things of the past, and in their place has sprung up a worthy class rivalry in manly sports, that for so many years have been here either entirely unknown, or only very tamely carried on. On every pleasant evening men may be seen, stripped to the waist, running around the "mile square," and in every spare hour, during the day, base-ball and other athletic exercises are pursued. In all these various games many members of our class take a prominent part; more than one half of the Wilder Base Ball Nine consists of '76 men, and one or two of us can "put the heavy stone" or "swing the heavy hammer" further than any one in College.

'76 will graduate twenty-four men, the largest graduating class from M. A. C. since '72. We have been peculiarly fortunate in retaining our members; since our Sophomore year, we have lost but two men, and their places have been filled with new comers. Since our entrance into College we have had continually a higher average in scholarship than any cotemporary class, and our members are all singularly equal in rank, the difference between the highest and the lowest in grade being comparatively slight.

We hope that, by our perfect recitations, our few "cuts" and "bolts," and by our strict attention to lectures, we have demonstrated to our Faculty that our purpose in coming to College is being carried out, and that we have co-operated with them to the best of our ability in their efforts in our behalf.

Fellow students, we would say, in conclusion, that through all our course, we have endeavored to do the best for you and for ourselves, and when the time comes for us to leave this institution, which has considerately cared for us for four long years, we sincerely hope that we may retain a bright spot in the memory of all with whom we have been associated.

U.

The earth has swung around again into its former position; thus having our premises established, we will proceed with our "communication."

Our class numbers seventeen, a loss of one from our number of last year. We are sorry to have him leave us; his presence is missed. We wish him success in whatever path he may tread. There also seems to be some danger of a loss of two others, owing to their aspirations.

One half of our college course is completed. We have entered the petted Junior year, the prominent feature of which is "ease." Alas! Believe it not, ye young aspirants for Junior prerogatives. It is but a fable, a thing of the past, and exists only in song or as a myth. We spend the flying moments thumbing the leaves of an "Adler," or pouring over the formulæ of "Deschanel." We've compassed the farm and "tested grapes," the latter going under the head of "practical horticulture." These, with some minor things, such as beating '76 at base-ball, occupy our time.

Time, with relentless hand, has deprived us of '75. We rejoice at their advancement, but mourn our loss. They were our true class friends and did much to initiate us in college ways; they seemed to be a set of men bound to succeed in life. We have high hopes of their future.

As we advance in our course, do we, as college students, fill the quota of manners that is expected of us?

Perhaps we are not yet altogether undeserving of the wild-cat reputation which students used to have. The Junior class is, perhaps, as bad in this respect as any other; now, classmates and collegemates, can't we obtain a higher perfection in this respect, and overcome some of this thoughtlessness and carelessness?

Among other things that have transpired, in the past year, is the very acceptable change in military instructors. We feel now as if we had a military teacher who understands us and takes an interest in his and our work. Military matters begin to have a pleasure and to have an object.

Early in the term the Sophs, came like birds of prey, who scent their flesh from afar. The amount of burnt cork they destroyed was astounding. The old clothes they wore were peculiar. They were bent on doing glorious things to Freshmen, but their designs, like other bad, barbarous ones, amounted to but little; they doubtless had good reasons for this attack; their assembled wisdom must have been great, for, when we consider that "one Sophomore is wiser in his own conceit, than seven Juniors, who can render a reason," it is not strange that they should follow unkind and ungentlemanly college Is it not about time some of these poor threadbare customs were done away, and a step taken above these things to something more worthy of our time and better calculated for our powers?

Who, classmates, would have thought, two years ago, that this time would be here so soon. We can look back to some of the pleasant times and enjoyments that we have passed, to the little that we have learned compared with what there is to learn in this vast field of knowledge we see spread out before us. It behooves us to make a better use of our time, that we may get a full benefit of our two remaining years.

Let us do what we can, as students and athletes, to maintain our spirit of class independence, and remember the requirements of our motto.

S.

One year of college life has passed away, and we are again called upon for our communication to the "Index." Several of our men have left during the past year, but others have come in and we are still the largest class in college.

Our first year here passed very pleasantly, and we feel sure that during that time we have gained the confidence of the Faculty, and have taken a high rank in scholarship. We can boast, especially, of excellence in chemistry and mathematics; and we think no class ever read more French, in the same time, than we.

We have aided in ornamenting the college grounds by setting out about fifty elms along the various drives near the college. This custom is, certainly, a good one, and we hope it will be kept up as well by the classes to come as it has by the preceding ones.

We have departed from the old custom of the college, by getting class canes instead of class pins. The canes are neat, solid looking sticks, and are fully able to support our youthful frames at all times.

The Freshmen, no doubt, appreciate our kindness to them. With the exception of administering a little medicine to one of them, who was very ill, if his pale face was any indication of his feelings, and kindly relieving another of the weight of a cane, with which he seemed inclined to burden himself, we have let them alone. Strange to say, on the second night of the term, when it was the custom of the Sophomores to tuck the Freshmen nicely into bed, so as to make them feel more at home, only five or six of the Freshies could be found around the dormitories, as a mania for sleeping down town seemed to have possessed most of them. same night our "infant," at the head of a valiant crowd of Sophs., made a midnight visit to one of the new arrivals, but finding himself confronted by a graduate of Yale, he thought it would be prudent to retire and ingloriously retreat. One evening, near the first of the term, when we were quietly studying, we suddenly heard a cry for '78. Of course we obeyed the call and found that it proceeded from the Freshmen, who were on the Campus, yelling as loud as they could. By the noise they made they must have been inspired with a great deal of courage, but we soon formed our men and sent the thermometer of their ardor down to zero, by giving them a little rush backward, for exercise. After this, we shook hands, and since then our relations with them have been very pleasant and friendly.

There is a great deal said, at the present time, against rushing in our colleges. But we can see no harm in rushing as we do here, where such good feeling exists between the classes.

Now, we will close, hoping that when we again have occasion to write for the Index, our numbers will not have decreased, and we shall have gained much in knowledge.

H.

We are respectfully requested to communicate to the Index. What! we, "Freshies," so low down in the depths of ignorance, and so awkward and uncouth in military evolutions, to place a communication beside that of the learned and stylish "Sophs." Are we, who are expected to retire at the latters' commands, and to be suffocated with smoke at their pleasure, to receive equal courtesy from the upper classes? If so, an inconsistency is apparent; and either the Juniors have descended from their proper level, or the Sophomores lack the civility of gentlemen. To facilitate a solution of this, we beg leave to refer any one to the President's talk on the morning of Sept. 3d, which, by the way, is the happiest lecture we have yet heard, and one that we fully appreciated. Now we do not propose to take up your space with our grievances and trials, but we earnestly hope, and do believe, that the day is not distant, when all class prejudices will have been banished from the colleges throughout our land.

We are pleased to note that the better sense of students, in many of our institutions of learning, has gained the ascendency over hazing, while in others rigorous measures are taken for its suppression. Of the many instances that we might cite, we notice Williams College, which has recently, through the efforts of its Faculty, put an end to the disreputable practice. Commenting upon the same, a leading educational journal remarks:

"We hope for the good order, good sense, and good reputation of one New England College, if in no more, that the execution is as effectual as the hangman's knot, and that there will be no resurrection of a barbarous practice, either in body or in spirit."

In some colleges Sophomores are required, on pain of expulsion, to sign papers to the effect that they will, under no circumstances, haze a fellow student, while different methods for its abolition are resorted to in others. How the change is effected matters not, but that it be done we believe all candid persons will admit.

Class of '79! How distant does that sound. endearing friendships will be consummated, and what ties dissevered, ere Old Father Time brings 'round that now distant year. But the moments pass quickly, and the days glide by, and the months and years roll on, O classmates, slowly, but yet so surely that, ere we are aware of it, our four years will have passed, and we be launched upon life's fluctuating tides. Hence the need that we improve to the utmost our opportunities, and that we cultivate those virtues and principles which are requisite for our guidance when our college days are over. In the Faculty of this college we are fortunate. Of them with whom we have had intercourse, we speak in unqualified terms of praise. We appreciate their interest in us, and hope to merit their constant favors. Let us not receive the false impression that to them alone is intrusted our success in the pursuit of knowledge; that they are responsible for any failure in the fulfillment of our mission here. Classmates, it lies with us; it is for us to decide what progress shall be made and what attainments acquired; what duties performed, and what slighted; and it is we who are amenable for any lack there may be in our acquirement of the studies here pursued. Then may we so improve the present, and be so influenced throughout our course that, looking back, we can see not one cause for regret. The future is before us. May it bring days of prosperity to us all.
